

BUSINESS ETHICS AND COMPETITIVENESS IN SMEs

Conference Program

14-16 November, 2016, Vienna, Austria

UNIVERSITY OF APPLIED SCIENCES
FOR MANAGEMENT & COMMUNICATION

LAUDER

CONFERENCE THEME

Many scholars and managers emphasize the importance of developing and implementing strategies, ethical standards, and governance structures that address environmental and societal issues. Such emphasis, however, often focuses exclusively on multinational corporations (MNCs) and large enterprises, with academic discussions largely centered on the corporate level and corporate sustainability (Engert et al., 2016; Spence, 2014). In the context of small and medium sized enterprises (SMEs), contributions analyzing social responsibility tend to concentrate on entrepreneurs and their (normative) motivations to engage in social issues (Spence, 2015; Fuller and Tian, 2006). A gap in knowledge and practice has arisen with respect to the possible relationships between environmental and social issues and SMEs, especially when it comes to strategic CSR initiatives and their impact on and implementation in small business strategies (Spence, 2016).

In their 2006 article "Strategy & Society," Michael Porter and Mark Kramer pointed out that the CSR efforts of many firms do not fit their companies' strategies, and that these efforts are sometimes counterproductive and seem to be uncoordinated, one-off activities. Their work, Creating Shared Value (CSV) (2011), which has earned a central place within the practical and academic discussion about engaging in societal issues, suggested turning society's needs into business opportunities that strengthen a company's competitive situation, while taking into account all stakeholders (even those previously left out). Although CSV has been applied to environmental and societal considerations in the context of many MNCs (e.g., Allianz, Nestlé or Unilever), there are few examples of it in the context of SMEs.

Academics in the field of business ethics remain skeptical about CSV, and it has been criticized in leading journals for its lack of novelty and underdevelopment in terms of application (e.g., Crane et al., 2014; Beschorner, 2013). Given the significance of Porter and Kramer's concept, however, additional research can help to clarify and develop CSV in general and as it applies specifically to SMEs.

CONFERENCE AIM

This conference aims to promote the exchange of knowledge, to share best practices, and to discuss the role of CSR and CSV in the context of SMEs and their competitiveness. Further, it aims to investigate and discuss academic contributions as well as practitioners' examples and experiences (providing a platform for both), to present research results and practical cases (whether CSR or CSV), and to clarify whether and how SMEs can apply lessons learned by larger companies and MNCs. This event is of particular interest for academics, outstanding graduate students, practitioners, policy-makers and managers/business owners from small and medium sized or family-run businesses, and it will provide an opportunity to network and engage with an international panel of recognized speakers.

ORGANIZING INSTITUTIONS AND TEAM

The conference is organized by the University of Applied Sciences for Management and Communication in cooperation with Lauder Business School.

The University of Applied Sciences for Management and Communication is one of Austria's leading business school and offers a range of undergraduate and postgraduate management programs. The subject of business ethics and corporate governance has not only been firmly integrated into all curricula of the study programs offered by the university but has also been acknowledged in strengthening its research capacities in this field. The Center for Strategy and Competitiveness (CSC) chairs the European chapter of the Harvard MOC network in 2016-17.

Lauder Business School (LBS) is a fully-accredited university of applied sciences located in Vienna. It offers English-language bachelor's and master's programs in the fields of business administration, management, banking and finance. People from over 40 countries are studying, teaching and working at LBS. The highly international profile of LBS's academic activities and its culturally diverse campus prepare its students and graduates for international business careers. LBS's alumni pursue successful corporate and entrepreneurial careers both in Austria and globally. LBS distinguishes itself as an international boutique business school with an excellent faculty-student ratio and student-centered applied learning methods. The Institute of Competitiveness (IoC) at LBS is the first of its kind in Austria. It serves as a hub for knowledge creation in the areas of competitiveness, entrepreneurship, and diversity.

VIENNA

How to get here?

Vienna International Airport is a major Central European hub with frequent connections to/from all over Europe, North America, Asia and the Middle East.

- From Vienna International Airport there are long-distance trains (Inter City or Railjet to Wien Hauptbahnhof/Vienna Main Station), a commuter rail line (S7 to Wien Mitte), a rapid but more expensive airport train service (City Airport Train to Wien Mitte) www.oebb.at
- Vienna Airport Lines bus services to several inner-city stops. All services drop you off near an underground station (see Public Transport Vienna) http://www.postbus.at/de/Flughafenbus/Vienna_AirportLines/index.jsp
- Taxis can be booked in the arrival area of the airport.

Bratislava Airport in Slovakia is also served by several European airlines. There are bus services from Bratislava Airport to Vienna.

Train: Most major long-distance trains stop at Vienna Main Station (Wien Hauptbahnhof). More information on timetables and tickets can be found at the Austrian Federal Railways (ÖBB). Some regional trains (especially Westbahn services) also stop at Vienna West Station (Wien Westbahnhof). www.oebb.at Bus: Most long-haul bus lines arrive at and depart from the Vienna International Bus Terminal.

Public Transport in Vienna: Vienna has a dense and reliable public transportation network. Underground, tram, bus and commuter rail lines travel at regular intervals from 5 am to 0:30 am. There are additional underground and bus lines Friday and Saturday nights. Single trips are rather costly compared to short-term tickets (e.g. 24 hours, 48 hours, 72 hours, or a ticket combining transportation and tourist attractions). Short-term tickets can be purchased at any underground and commuter rail station, but not on trams and buses. <http://www.wienerlinien.at/eportal3/ep/tab.do?tabId=0>
